The first part of the paper is devoted to a discussion of the various methods of determining the rate of reaction. The most common method is the use of a clock reaction, in which the time taken for a certain amount of product to be formed is measured. This method is only applicable to reactions which proceed at a constant rate. The second method is the use of a colorimeter, in which the change in color of a solution is measured. This method is applicable to reactions in which a colored substance is formed or consumed. The third method is the use of a titration, in which the amount of a substance is determined by its reaction with a known amount of another substance. This method is applicable to reactions in which a substance is consumed or formed in a known amount.

 The second is that the system is not a static one, but a dynamic one, which is constantly changing and evolving. The third is that the system is not a closed one, but an open one, which is constantly interacting with the environment.
 The fourth is that the system is not a linear one, but a non-linear one, which is characterized by feedback loops and other non-linearities.
 The fifth is that the system is not a deterministic one, but a stochastic one, which is characterized by random fluctuations and noise.
 The sixth is that the system is not a simple one, but a complex one, which is characterized by many interacting components and a high degree of complexity.
